Plans Laid for Annual Xmas Party for Tots In December

Four new regular members and three junior members were initiated into the auxiliary post No. 195, American Legion, Tuesday night, at the annual Thanksgiving dinner, held by the unit at the Veterans' Memorial building. There were thirty-seven in attendance. District President Berna Morton, of Albany, was guest of honor.

Following the turkey dinner, during which the Misses Lorraine Peterson and Natalie Campos sang three numbers, a short business session was held. Plans were laid for the annual Christmas party for the children of post members. Mrs. Angie Furtado, of Centerville, was named chairman of the arrangement committee. Mrs. Florence Campos will have charge of the entertainment.

New junior members to enter the unit were Eleanor Costa, Natalie Campos and Marjorie Jason. Carrie Nunes, Violet Manly and Lucille Day were three of the regular new members to take the oath. Mrs. W. L. McWhirter, a charter member of the unit, was also formally initiated.

The Hotel Belvoir was recently given a thorough renovation and painting.

Joseph Aguilar, of Decoto, sentenced for reckless driving Monday, is spending this week and a part of next in the county jail. He was convicted on the count at the Niles justice court.

Aguilar, seen driving on the highway between Niles and Decoto Monday, was arrested by Traffic Officer Duffy Lewis. There was no accident involved.

Mrs. Henry May Honors Mrs. Charles Whipple

Mrs. Henry May, of Alvarado, was hostess Tuesday afternoon to the Sisters Club, in honor of Mrs. Charles Whipple. Mr. and Mrs. Whipple, residents of Juneau, Alaska, for the past twenty-four years, recently came to California to make their home. They will live in this district.

MANUEL J. FURTADO, VETERAN, TAKEN BY DEATH

Years of illness, many months of which were spent at the Veterans hospital at Livermore, ended in death at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning for Manuel J. Furtado, forty-year-old war vetern, at his home on J street, Niles. He was allowed to go home from the hospital recently, thought on the road to recovery. His illness dated back to the last days of the war, when he was severely gassed in the trenches.

A native of Centerville, Furtado made his home there for many years, his family moving to Niles last March. He was a member of the American Legion Post 195 and the Hayward post, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Rose Furtado, and four children—Lorraine, Gloria, Kenneth and Jean. Surviving brothers and sisters, all residents of Centerville, are: Joseph L., Joaquin S., Thomas, John, Mary, Rose and Louise Furtado.

Funeral will be held this morning from the Chapel of Palms, Centervile, at 9 o'cock, with a requiem high mass following at the Holy Ghost church at 9:30 o'clock. Burial will be in the Holy Ghost cemetery.

VOTERS REJECT BOND ISSUE FOR SCHOOL REPAIR WORK

A proposed $25,000 bond issue, for repairs to make the Alvarado Grammar school secure against possible earthquake shocks, was met coldly by voters in an election there this week. Of the thirty-three people who went to the polls three favored the issue and thirty voted "no."

The election came after a period of deliberation by the board of trustees, during which time mass meetings were called twice to sound out public opinion. Poor attendance at the meetings necessitated the election, in order that the board could get a line on the sentiment of the taxpayers. Now that the issue has been decisively defeated, board members feel that their responsibility has been fulfilled, and damage or injuries resulting from a building failure in the future must be answered to by the Alvarado public.

There will be nothing further done in the matter, according to Mrs. Walter Robie, clerk, unless recommended by the district attorney.

MARSHES "FRONT" AS DUCK SEASON OPENS YESTERDAY

Salvos from automatic shotguns, clouds of feathers, and the bewildered quacks of luckless waterfowl, marked the hour of 7 o'clock yesterday morning in southern Alameda county marshlands and ponds, when the 1935 duck season got under way. Riding high and successfully on the fact that they surprised the birds after a peaceful summer, numerous nimrods bagged their limits.

In comparison with other years, the supply of birds is fairly good in this section, according to Game Warden Fred Rogers. He cites a number of important regulations concerning hunting this year, with the statement that they will be rigidly enforced.

Hunters over sixteen years of age must carry a migratory bird hunting stamp, sold at post offices for $1.00. Name of the hunter must be written, in ink, across the face of the stamp.

During the duck season, November 20 to December 19, the shooting hours of each day begin at 7 a. m. and end at 4 p. m. The daily bag limits on all migratory game birds are: ducks, ten in the aggregate; geese, including brant, four in the aggregate. Baiting the birds is illegal, as is the use of live ducks and geese decoys. The shooting of birds from any boat propelled other than by hand is unlawful.

Rogers calls attention to the fact that the migratory game birds may not be bought or sold.

Alleged Forgery Brings Arrest of Milpitas Man

Alleged to have signed his mothers name to a $460 check, which he cashed at the Centerville branch of the Bank of America, Willam R. Gomes, 32, of Milpitas, will appear before a Santa Clara county superior court tomorrow, to answer forgery charges. The charges were brought by George F. Roderick, assistant cashier of the Centerville bank.

Gomes, a cannery worker, was arrested in Fresno, and returned to San Jose for trial.

PHOEBE HEARST P-T.A. COUNCIL TO MEET HERE

Niles P.-T. A. Hostesses to Ladies of Twelve Units Today

Twelve parent-teachers' units of Alameda county, comprising the Phoebe Hearst council, will gather for their regular monthly meeting at the Niles Grammar school today, with the members of the Niles chapter hostesses. Mrs. Carl T. Dixon, of Castro Valley, president of the council, will preside.

The all-day meeting will get under way this morning with reports from presidents of the several associations on work accomplished during the past few weeks, after which the address of the day will be delivered by Ollie Snedeger, of the probation court. Luncheon will be served at noon, under the direction of Mrs. C. H. Franklin, luncheon chairman of the Niles unit. The afternoon will be given to a play, to be staged by Niles Grammar school children, and a talk by E. Dixon Bristow, principal.

Mrs. J. Zwissig, president of the local organization, asked all members to attend, adding that the meeting will be open to the public.

At the regular meeting last week, Mrs. Clark Griffin, who has had charge of the school cafeterian, handed in her resignation. Her place will be filled by Mrs. E. Griffith, formerly of the Masonic Home staff. Mrs. Griffith will take over the cafeteria on December 1.

Refreshments for the day were served by sixth grade mothers, directed by Mrs. C. N. Myrick.

The program of the afternoon consisted of a clever play, staged by the children of Miss Celeste Bunker's class. Mrs. Roland Bendel reviewed Ellen Glasgow's book, "Vein of Iron."

JUNIOR NOMINATION DATE ADVANCED TO DECEMBER

The annual nomination of officers for the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce, originally slated for the first week in January, will be held on the first Monday in December, following a decision to that effect at the regular meeting of the group Monday night.

The decision came after a discussion of the lengthy program slated for the first of the year, which necessitates a reduction in the amount of routine work for that period. Following the nomination, ballots will be sent out and the members will vote by mail, the votes to be counted at the January meet. It was voted to modify the by-laws to meet these requirements.

Among other business, the group voted to purchase a better truck for the street-cleaning service.

In response to a letter from the Alvarado Chamber of Commerce, Joe Pioletti was named to meet with that body last night, to discuss the question of quarterly meetings for all township civic groups.

The next meeting will be held at the Niles Tavern on December 2.

Advanced Pupils Stage Series of Tableaux Here

A serie of historical tableaux, depicting episodes in the history of many countries, were presented at the Niles Grammar school Friday afternoon. The skits, enacted by pupils of the upper grades, were directed by the teachers, and were made even more authentic by costume.

HIGHWAY PROJECT MAY BE OFF

NILES REALIGNMENT NOT IN APPROVED LIST SATURDAY

The "on again, off again" nature of the proposed highway realignment, to transfer the state highway from First street to Vallejo street at Niles, continued in the "off again" character this week, when a list of grade crossing projects given presidential approval did not include the local undertaking.

Announced Saturday by the secretary of agriculture, the list completely omitted the Niles project, although five Alameda county projects were named. The sum involved for the total number of projects in the state is $7,486,362. The grade crossing allotment exhausts the state allotment for that purpose.

According to H. S. McCurdy, of the office of Jno. H. Skeggs, highway division engineer, in a special statement to the Register Tuesday, the Niles project was slated to be included among those approved. He said that definite information on the matter could be obtained only from Earl Lee Kelly, director of public works.

Efforts to avert the realignment work here have been diligently carried on by the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce during the past weeks. PWA officials have been requested to divert the funds to some other use. Sam Kerns, president of the junior group, and J. N. Viveiros, recently made a trip to Sacramento, where they intervewed Kelly on the matter.

VETERAN HORSE NEARS RECORD AGE AT NILES

Old age holds no terrors for Lambie, in fact its a pretty soft old life, but then sixteen years in harness (the lifetime of the average horse, merits a long rest.

Lambie, in case you have not already heard of her, is Miss Jane Smith's retired horse, now well into her thirty-second year of life. Lambie, in spite of her years, still carries a glossy coat and a full set of teeth, and dines on the best hay and grain the market affords. It was in 1919, when Miss Smith purchased her first car, that the veteran equine had her harness removed for the last time. Now the only thing she wears is a blanket on cold nights. Every afternoon, when the sun gets low, Lambie is led to her barn, and bedded down in thick, sweet hay.

Dr. N. E. Clemens, veterinarian, who is Lambie's personal physician, states that the oldest horse he has ever heard of lived to be thirty-two, the age Miss Smith's horse is crowding. Comanche, sole survivor of the famous General Custer massacre, lived to be twenty-nine, not much of a feat in Lambie's estimation.

But, then, Lambie springs from good stock. Her sire was Little Direct, fastest horse in California in his time, and her dam a pedigreed mare.

Miss Smith, whose unceasing care has prolonged the life of Lambie to an almost legendary length, holds that Lambie is like some people, "who live long and gracefully."

WEEK'S VACATION FOR THANKSGIVING TO BEGIN MONDAY

Attention of parents, as well as that of school pupils throughout Washington township, is called to the change of vacation dates this year.

Classes will be dismissed tomorrow afternoon, not to be resumed until December 2, thus lengthening the Thanksgiving vacation period three days. The Christmas holiday vacation will begin one week later than usual this year, and be for a period of two rather than three weeks.

The change is brought about by the shift of teachers' institute to Thanksgiving week from the first week of the Christmas vacation.

Teachers of grammar school classes throughout the district will attend institute Monday at the Bret Hart school, in Hayward, and in Oakland schools on the two following days. Each school in Washington township has prepared a display, to be shown at the Hayward school Monday.

MRS. MINNIE ROSE DIES SUDDENLY SATURDAY

A native of Irvington and a resident of the Decoto district for the greater part of her life, Mrs. Minnie Cecelia Rose, 48, died suddenly Saturday while engaged in her household duties. Although her health was known to be failing, her death came as a shock to her family and friends.

Surviving are four sisters—Mrs. Rose Goularte, Mrs. Julia Joseph, Mrs. John Soito and Mrs. Helen Boland — and three brothers, Frank, Joseph and Manuel Mendonca. Her husband, Manuel Rose, also is left to mourn her passing.

Funeral was Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock from the family home now the home of Mrs. Soito, on the Bell ranch road, near Decoto. A requiem high mass followed at the Corpus Christi church, Niles, at 10:00 o'clock. Burial was in the Centerville cemetery. The funeral was under the direction of the Chapel of Palms.

Smith Elected Decoto Sewer Board Head

George Smith, one of the five Decoto men recently named commissioners of the new Decoto sanitary district, was elected president of the board at a meeting of the officials a short time ago. William Hurst was elected secretary.

On Monday of this week, the board members went over the district with H. F. Grey, engineer, to inspect several possible sites for the sewage disposal plant, included in the plans. The board has not yet made a definite selection of an engineer to direct construction work, although they are considering several. Members stated that H. F. Grey, although he drew up original plans, will not serve as construction engineer. He may donate some of his time in an advisory capacity later.

Next step in the sewer plan will be a bond election, to take place as soon as definite costs are established.

Other members of the new board of commissioners are Joe Kelly, Frank Thomas and Chas. Brown, who will serve until 1939. Hurst and Smith will serve until 1937.

BIDS OPENED ON QUAKE REPAIRS AT HIGH SCHOOL

Bids were opened Tuesday night on earthquake-proofing repairs at the Washington Union High school. Following the selection of the contractor by the board of trustees, the winnng bid will be passed on by the district attorney and sent to PWA officials for final approval. Construction will get under way within ten days after the final approval.

During the period of construction, which will mostly effect the main building, classes will be held in the gymnasium and in the shops.

The work will be under way by the middle of December, school authorities estimated.

New Sloan-Hirsch Hearing To Be Held At Hayward Next Tuesday

The first case in Alameda county to come under the new Frazier-Lamke law, the Sloan-Hirsch foreclosure case, will be heard next Tuesday at the office of the Farm Bureau, on B street, Hayward. The new law, in addition to placing more authority with the conciliation commissoner, also puts upon him the burden of acting as a referee in bankruptcy.

Time for the hearing will be 2 o'clock p. m.

As a departure from the former method in similar cases, the head conciliator, Ben S. Alen, and the conciliator from Contra Costa county, Wm. Garavanta, will virtually take charge of the hearing.

The case involves the attempted foreclosure by E. H. Hirsch, of Irvington, on the property of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Sloan, of Christian Hollow road.

SAN JOSE TO BE UNHEALTHY FOR DRUNKEN DRIVERS

Alcohol and gasoline, that lethal mixture, will not be tolerated in San Jose hereafter, if Police Judge Percy O'Conner has anything to say about it, which he has. A sharp increase in drunken driving within the city limits recently prompted Judge O'Conner to order a revised bail schedule for release of persons charged with driving while intoxicated.

The old $100 cash bail schedule for misdemeanor charges of drunken driving is raised to $250 cash or $500 bond.

Minimum bail police are authorized to accept on prisoners charged with felenious drunken driving is $500 and $1000 bond, and the bail will range upward depending on the seriousness of each individual case.

Such an innovation in Alameda county, the drunken drivers paradise, would make our own roads safer for travel, it is pointed out.

RUMMAGE SALE NETS MORE THAN $50 FOR BRANCH

Mrs. J. R. Whipple, Toyon Branch chairman, stated her satisfaction with the results of the annual rummage sale, which ended here Tuesday morning. The sale began last Thursday.

Offering old clothes and shoes for a few cents per garment or pair, the annual event netted over $50 for the local organization. Huge quantities of goods were sold this time, necessitating an extension of the sale through Monday. Mrs. Whipple said that response to the request for old garments was the largest in recent years.

At the next regular meeting of the branch, the main business of the day will be the nomination of officers.

Three Tons of Prunes Net Grower Thirty-seven Cents

A thirty-seven-cent check for final payment on three tons of prunes! Thus Mrs. W. A. Sloan, of Irvington, was paid by Prune Code officials recently for fruit taken last year.

As Mrs. Sloan puts it, those prunes, along with many other tons, were put behind the Prune Code bars, and brooded upon by code officials, until Uncle Sam turned them loose to ease the emptiness of unemployed stomaches. But when he turned them loose, their value had taken a terrible tumble. Worth $200 at the market price when taken by the brooding officials, they brought $50.94 when released. The Sloans had borrowed $50 on the three tons from the code officials last spring. This, with interest, (deducted from their own money) when taken from the $50.94, left the thirty-seven-cent check, which Mrs. Sloan plans to frame.

Within that frame will be the whole picture of the AAA, Mrs. Sloan holds.

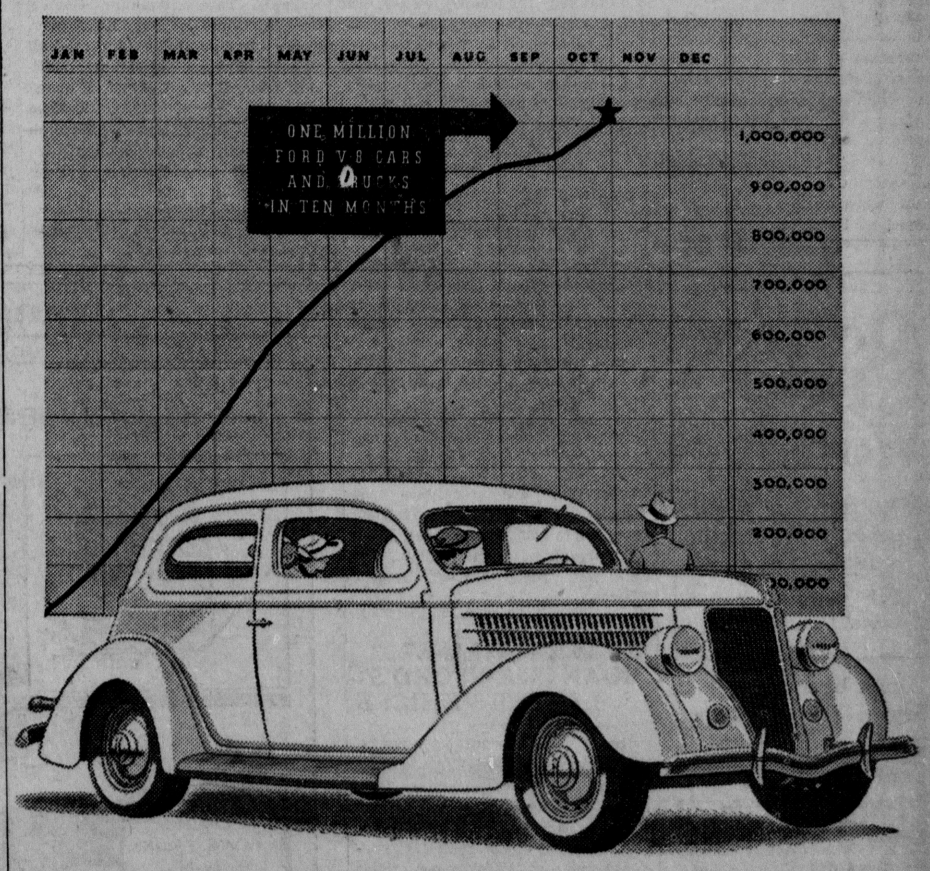
V·8 LEADERSHIP



ON OCTOBER 31 of last year, Henry Ford announced his intention to build a million Ford V-8s in 1935. We are pleased to report that this goal was reached in exactly ten months instead of a full year.

One million cars and trucks is an impressive total. But figures by themselves mean nothing. It is what they represent that counts. Selling a V-8 at a low price has brought a new kind of automobile within reach of the people. Producing it has provided steady work for hundreds of thousands of men in the Ford plants, in associated industries and on the farm.

These million Ford V-8 cars and trucks have helped to make things better all around. In the first ten months of 1935 the Ford Motor Company paid out, in the United States alone, $140,119,326.00 in wages and $523,111,389.00 for materials.

Anthony Silva, member of the Washington chapter. Future Farmers, returned to Centerville last week-end with a medal proclaiming him as winner of third place in the organization's public speaking contest, held at the Future Farmers' stock show, at Los Angeles, Friday.

Silva's talk, emphasizing the plight of the unorganized farmer in a highly organized world, was rated as among the best for subject matter. He was accompanied to Los Angeles by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. F. Silva; Paul Dougherty, agricultural instructor and advisor of the Future Farmers' chapter, attended the show, with the following members of the chapter here: Melvin Allegre, Martin Duarte, Kioru Inouye and Ritchie Inouye.

Winner of the speaking contest, in which representatives of six regions competed, was Donald Burchalter, of Tomales.

Silva, who impressed members of the Eden-Washington Farm Center here with his talk recently, has been asked to deliver it before other farm centers and before the Hayward Rotary Club.

JESS REGLI EXPLAINS FOOTBALL RULES FOR CHAMBER

In a fever heat of enthusiasm over the coming "Big Game," members of the Niles Chamber of Commerce had their sports appetite whetted Monday, when J. Regli, Washington Union High school coach, gave a brief talk on the coast football situation. Jess was careful to make no definite forecast in the presence of the numerous sidehill quarterbacks, who number about fifty-fifty in California and Stanford supporters.

Regli, who officiated at games in Monterey county on his Saturday off, answered numerous technical questions concerning rules and regulations. He lauded the fumble rule, which protects the offensive eleven, and held the "dead ball" rule detrimental, in that it robbed the game of many interesting flashes. Regli humorously proclaimed the alumni the greatest bugaboo a coach has to face.

After placing all their bets, mainly with Chamber President E. C. Grau, Stanford supporter who takes all comers, the meeting adjourned. It was announced that E. Dixon Bristow will be speaker of the day next Monday.

Featuring next Monday's meeting will be a huge turkey dinner, with all the fixings, at which there will be a number of invited guests. A. J. Petsche, secretary, states that all members should make an effort to be on hand.

1936 CHEVROLET ONLY COMPLETE LOW-PRICED CAR

Sensationally living up to its advance billing as "the only complete low-priced car," the 1936 Chevrolet today is being wholeheartedly acclaimed by thousands of Pacific coast motorists as the greatest value ever to bear the popular General Motors nameplate. Ed. Rose, local dealer, is enthusiastic about the car.

Outstanding among the many new features of both Master DeLuxe and Standard models are improved engines having higher compression ratio (6 to 1); balanced carburetor; full-length water jecketing and other improvements resulting in greater gasoline and oil economy; the Cromodine rust-prevention of fenders and running boards. Front doors of all models of both lines are hinged at the front. Spoke-type pressed steel wheels are used on Standard models.

Chevrolet's all-enclosed knee-action units, now entering their third year, remain unchanged from their original design, except for an improvement in the method of attaching the wheel spindle to the support arm. The riding comfort and driving ease ushered into motoring by knee-action suspension two years ago, have been carried to new heights in the 1936 line.

Congregational Church News

The pastors sermon for Sunday morning deals with a subject which is close to many thinking people today. It is entitled "Are We What the Past has Made Us?" It is sometimes worthwhile to speculate on the probability of man's independence of environment and heredity. The questions the pastor will attempt to answer in his Sunday morning sermon are as old as the race of man—and some of the answers will be equally old.

A. Dodge, of Palo Alto, one time missionary to the Pacific Islands, gave a most interesting illustrated lecture Sunday evening. It is to be regretted that more people do not take advantage of special services of this kind.

Sunday school meets between the hours of 10 and 10:55. Christian Endeavor at the parsonage between the hours of 6 and 8.

There is not a boy in the community who can afford to miss the good times enjoyed by Mr. Gordon's class of boys in their numerous rock-hunting trips. Several boys accompanied their teacher to the slopes of Mt. Diablo last Saturday, where they found several beautiful gypsum crystals. More trips are planned in the near future.

RESOLUTION SEEKS BENEFITS FOR PRODUCERS

R. W. Kennedy, active in Farm Center affairs in this district, presented a resolution Monday to the vegetable department of the California Farm Bureau Federation, asking that action be taken along several lines to better the lot of tomato growers. The resolution was submitted to the state group at Santa Cruz.

The resolution, which was drawn up at Centerville last Tuesday night by the Eden-Washington Farm Center, asks that the state organization urge all tomato growers not to sign either open contracts or contracts at the 1935 price for next year's crop. Adoption of the farm bureau tomato contract was also recommended, as was a thorough investigation of the possible use of the tomato pro-rate to protect growers of canning tomatoes.

Need for action along these lines was outlined in the resolution by a series of statements, calling attention to the fact that cost of tomato production is rising, due to higher wages, more rigid inspection, and the rising cost of implements and supplies. It was also pointed out that while the retail price of canned tomatoes has advanced, little or no benefit has come through to the growers.

The resolution was signed by Herbert Young, chairman of the local unit, and Paul Dougherty, secretary.

Red Fife Wheat Brought to Ontario From Europe

The progress of wheat northward, almost to the Arctic circle, has been described as beginning in 1841, when David Fife, an Ontario farmer, asked a friend to send him some wheat from northern Europe. The friend got a handful of grain from a ship just docking at Glasgow from Danzig, says a writer in the Washington Star. Fife planted the seeds in his garden, but only five came up, two of which were eaten by a cow. From the three remaining plants came the so-called Red Fife wheat which proved so adapted to the climate of Canada and the northern United States that in the course of a half century it had spread over the greater part of the country.

This, in turn, was the foundation of the still more productive marquis wheat, which is credited with playing a major part in the allied victory in the World war. But with the extension of Canadian agriculture northward, came the development of still another wheat, the garnet, which ripens from 10 days to two weeks earlier than the marquis and can be grown almost up to the Arctic circle. The problem is to get wheat from the Far North of as good quality as that grown farther south. One of the great wheat countries of the world is the Peace river district, north of Edmonton.

DOWN

AGAIN—Electric RATES DROP

Down they go! Beginning with your January bills electric rates will be reduced for home use, for commercial lighting and large industrial power, according to the amount of electricity used.

Down goes the cost of electric cooking and water heating, lighting, for washing machines and ironers, and for all the smaller uses, from the electric clocks to the doorbell transformers, to the percolator and toaster that get the daily breakfast. Electricity becomes cheaper, too, to every merchant, large or small, and in all office buildings for commercial lighting of windows, stores, counters, signs, etc.

It is important news and good news that this reduction will save Pacific Gas and Electric Company customers nearly $4,000,000 a year. It is unusual news in these days when general living costs are pushing higher and higher. Think of it! As shown in the chart above, the Cost of Living is UP 33.3% above the pre-war level. The cost of electricity with the new low rates is 35.4% below that level—and that means 68.7% below today's cost of living.

Establishing a record unmatched by any other item in the cost of living, the cost of electricity has steadily gone down since 1928. Successive rate reductions since that year show an accumulated total of $54,621,000—equivalent to an annual saving to customers of over $6,800,000.

Not Circulating Library

The Library of Congress is not intended as a lending or circulating library, but as a reference library and permanent store house of human knowledge. Only certain officials at Washington are entitled, by statute, to the privilege of drawing books for home use. Special permits for borrowing books are freely issued by the librarian, however, to persons engaged in research, and there is also maintained an interlibrary loan system by which books may be loaned to other libraries for use of those engaged in serious investigation.

Good for Man and Beast

Dogs are credited with the discovery of quinine, one of the most beneficial medicines supplied by Nature. Long years ago, the Incas of Peru noticed that dogs with sniffly noses sought out the bark of the chinchona trees. They'd chew some of it and the sniffles would stop. The Indians tried it, found it good for colds, and it's been used by man ever since.—Washington Post.

St. Bernard Heaviest Dog

The St. Bernard holds the record for weight, but not for height. That belongs to the Irish wolfhound. The modern wolfhound stands about 38 inches at the shoulder, but there are records of far larger dogs in the old days. One is said to have been no less than four feet in height at the shoulder.

Naming Bougainville

Bougainville was named for Louis Antoine de Bougainville, French geographer and discoverer (1729-1811) by Philibert Commerson, French botanist (1727-1773) who in 1767 at the command of King Louis XV of France accompanied de Bougainville on a voyage around the world.

Tennessee Calling

By SCOTT W. RYALL

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

ADRIANE BARTON, sitting back in her chair, listened to the toastmaster's eulogies; listened cynically as he enlarged upon her medals and honorary degrees.

These banqueters envied her athletic figure, the weather-bronzed face beneath its high piled mass of Nordic blond hair.

"Air queen," the toastmaster said, then his words drifted into memories, vague thoughts of people who could never wear starched fronts if they had them, vague desires to be among them.

She remembered a little airport in Missouri or Tennessee—she she couldn't remember which. There was a blustery little first cousin to a cyclone raging and she took a long chance in landing on the postage stamp field at dusk.

There was a moment of vast relief as the wheels settled safely; she had turned the plane and rested, the motor throbbing idly. The truth was she had been in trembling fright. Yes, she—the woman had done these things which people at the banquet so enthusiastically applauded.

A figure had left the shed at the far end of the landing field. She had watched it stumble, fall, then come trotting on. She opened the throttle with a still trembling hand and taxied toward it.

She saw a young man with flaming red hair that glistened in the last light of a stormy day. He was waving an arm cheerfully, sweeping it in a half-circle to indicate where she should run the plane.

"Hullo," he greeted, when she cut the ignition, "you lucky guy. Hop in the shed. There's coffee. I'll stake the crate down."

"Stake it?" she asked, pulling off her helmet and turning out a cascade of golden hair.

He stared at her.

"A woman!" he exclaimed. "Lady, don't you think anything of your neck? This is no flying weather for a woman."

"Or anybody else," she said dryly. "Let's get to that coffee. The plane's all right."

He grinned.

"That's what you think. You may find it in the next county by morning. We're in for a blow."

She nodded, and as she was weary from the difficult fight with the winds and weakened by fear, she obeyed his suggestion.

The shed held the shadowy form of an old plane and a light glowed from a side room. Coffee was steaming on a small stove and gratefully sh edrank a cupful before he again appeared.

He looked at her critically, then went about laying a dinner, firing questions all the while. She did not tell him who she was and he did not ask.

He gave her every courtesy and later relinquished the room to her.

"I'm going over to a friend's," he said jovially. "Make yourself at home. I hope the roof doesn't blow off."

She objected, but not strenuously. It was a difficult situation. He went out into the wind now tearing and howling about the building. The storm cut loose then and the creaking of boards mingled with the rattling pound of rain until exhaustion claimed her and she slept soundly.

She awoke early, as was her habit, and her first thought was the plane. The redhead was already up on the cowling.

"Boy!" he called enthusiastically, "this is a wagon! I guess every guy has an ambition to hop off in one of these."

She laughed.

"It's a steady old boat. It sure stood up well last night."

"I've checked the engine."

"Thanks, I'll take it out of your way."

He looked his surprise.

"Too much wind yet," he warned, "better wait awhile. And there's something else—"

"I've taken it out in worse than this," she said, laughing, and as she insisted, he reluctantly helped her into the cockpit.

"Wait a minute," he said earnestly, climbed on the wing and looked long at her face.

She flushed under the gaze.

"Tell me your name," he said.

"Jane Doe."

He grimaced wryly. "Yeah, I've heard a lot of them. I'm Red. That's all. Just Red. And good luck!"

She laughed, he grinned, there was a roar of the motor, a short run and she felt a gust of wind toss it like a balloon. She circled the field, saw the tiny figure waving, then he was left behind—somewhere in Tennessee.

The toastmaster broke into her thought as he waved his arm and announced, "Miss Adriane Barton."

She rose before the panorama of white faces and thunder of clapping hands. Momentarily she stood there, trying to get her bearings, for she had been flying back just then, the rolling hills of Missouri beneath her, the more formidable peaks of Tennessee in the distance, her eyes peeled for a decaying airport and a mop of flaming red hair. . . .

Silo-Filling Is Important Work

Care Necessary to Prevent Moldy or Fired Spots in Silage Later.

By Prof. H. C. Hopper, New York State College of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Care at silo-filling time prevents moldy or fired spots in the silage later in the winter when the feeders get well down into the contents of the silo.

In very tall silos where much pressure develops, the silage often keeps perfectly without being distributed or tramped; but only when moisture conditions are correct. It is advisable to level off and tramp the surface in all silos.

How to fill and when to fill depends largely on the condition of the corn. Dry corn should probably be distributed, tramped, and perhaps watered. Corn that has plenty of water needs little or no attention.

Two general plans of filling silos are followed. In one the flexible distributor pipe is moved about constantly by an operator who tramps and levels the silage at the same time. More men are sometimes put in to help him.

The other plan is to blow the corn into the top of the silo without anyone in the silo to tramp or level the corn. In this way the lighter portions work toward the outside and the heavier portions accumulate in the center. This is likely to give an uneven grade of silage. If the corn is very ripe or dry and has more than 35 per cent of dry matter some may spoil along the sides. Corn with a good deal of water will pack closely and will be preserved by fermentation.

Cloture in U. S. Senate

In the senate, debate had been unlimited, but a filibuster in 1908 by Senator LaFollette of seventeen hours, by Senator Smoot, in 1915, and other lesser filibusters, caused the senate to adopt a cloture rule in 1926, providing that in the event of a threatened deadlock on a measure, sixteen senators might present a petition that the amount of debate on the measure be limited and the bill brought up for action. This petition would be presented to the senate floor and if concurred in by two-thirds vote the measure would be considered and each senator limited to one hour's debate on the measure.

The Only Man

CHARLEY BUTLER, long, lean and somber-eyed, stared moodily after the slight figure of Marie Albers as she disappeared into the dusky blue depths of his auto court. Marie, he reflected, was everything that a woman ought to be—small, and sweet and restful. Marie would bring a man peace instead of the torture that Katie had included with her room-and-board. It was two years now since he had fled from Katie. He had put three thousand miles between them. It was all or nothing!

He shrugged impatiently—he hated dusk and memories—and pushed the button that turned the gas station into a blaze of colored lights. Then he hurried across the graveled stretch to the dusty, twelve-cylinder sedan that had stopped in front of the pump.

"K-Katie!" he stammered, staring at the big travel-stained woman who sat behind the wheel.

There was an amused look in her soft dark eyes. "It's me, Charley," she answered. "You've got lots of room out here. Got a cabin for me?"

He reddened under the sprinkling of freckles and swallowed hard before he spoke. "Which one of those dying-calf-eyed sissies hooked you, Katie?"

She laughed at him. "None of 'em, Charley. There's just me."

She followed him down the path and into the two-room affair. "This'll be Jake, Charley," she said as she stood in the opening between the tiny kitchen and the bedroom.

Charley watched her in sullen defiance. She was just the same. Big and handsome, deep bosomed, lips and eyes that drew men as honey draws flies. And, of course, he wanted her. He wanted to kiss her till she wasn't amused, till she'd hold onto him and tell him that he was the only man in the world!

Katie stepped into the kitchen and turned on the light over the funny little sink.

"Not much like our kitchen back there, is it, Charley?" she said, and her lips moved in their slow, tantalizing smile.

He looked at her coldly and shrugged. She wanted him to remember and suffer some more, but he'd show her he didn't care! A woman like Katie ought to be branded! But what good would it do to brand her? Here he stood. He knew her. He'd spent two years forgetting her. Yet here he stood, grinding his teeth to keep from kneeling at Katie's feet.

"Are there some back steps where you can sit and kind of cool off after supper, Charley?"

Remembrance of twilight and Katie caught him unaware and wrenched him with an agonizing twist. He stepped before her, his lips set in a grim line. But when she raised her eyes to him he could only look into their warm, sweet depths. He put his arms around her and in dizzy joy he felt the touch of her, softly vibrant, against him.

"Katie!" he cried hoarsely. "Katie! I can't live without you. Love me just a little, Katie!"

"I love you a lot, Charley," she said, and their tears mingled as she answered his kisses.

At sunrise Charley drifted from dreams of Katie into conscious thoughts of her. She had been lonesome. She had followed him because she was unhappy without him. She loved him! A sweet warmth crept over him remembering her eyes, her lips, her voice . . . "I love you a lot, Charley." He threw back the covers and sprang out of bed for he was to marry Katie at ten o'clock. Katie always got up early and she could eat breakfast with him, and then he'd get Jim and Harry to leave the service station long enough to be witnesses.

Charley hurried down the path to Katie's back door. It was open, but his hand paused before his knock sounded on the screen. He stopped stone-still, and then stepped quickly out of sight. For Jim and Harry were eating breakfast with Katie! And in that brief, deathlike pause before the door he had seen the look in their eyes, the worshiping look of the boarding-house crew!

He turned slowly and went back to his cabin, shutting himself in with his pain. Katie was his life. She was everything in the world to him. But he wasn't everything to Katie.

The door opened slowly and Katie came and stood before him. There was a troubled look in her dark eyes.

"I saw your face in the mirror, Charley, when you stopped by my door, and I guess you don't understand too well."

"That's the trouble. I understand too well."

Her face softened and she shook her head. "No, you don't, Charley. You see, I got to thinking after you left last night, that maybe you'd think I came because nobody else wanted me, and that wasn't why."

He looked at her, breathless, intent, waiting for her words.

"I came, Charley, because I found out that you're the only man in the world."

Helium Gas

Helium gas was discovered on the sun long before it was found to exist on the earth. It has no color, taste, nor smell. It does not burn nor support combustion. In fact, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune, it does not react with anything, even at the highest temperatures obtainable. It has been liquefied, but only at a temperature much lower than is required for any other gas. It is virtually insoluble in all liquids. It even comes rather close to having no weight. In short, it bears a distinct resemblance to an absolute void. It lacks even the rather spirited personality of a vacuum.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—The future of the still youthful and comely "Widder" Marcia Howe, recently released by death from her idling, selfish husband, is a conversational tit-bit among the housewives of the little hamlet of Wilton. Eligible bachelors and widowers also are interested.

CHAPTER II.—Marcia, despite her unfortunate matrimonial experience, finds pleasure in her daily life, but is lonely at times, and has invited her late husband's niece, Sylvia Hayden, whom she has never seen, to visit her. The girl arrives and Marcia takes to her at once, while Sylvia, expecting to see a somewhat elderly aunt, finds Marcia more like a sister.

CHAPTER III.—Into the uneventful, happy lives of the two women comes "Adventure." A stranger, on the verge of exhaustion, finds his way to Marcia's home. Cared for, he explains that his power-boat ran aground in the fog. His wrist is injured. Secretly, he asks Marcia to hide a package containing jewelry. She does so. The doctor comes, with Elisha Winslow, town sheriff, bringing the news of a jewel robbery on a neighboring Long Island estate. The stranger, hospitably put to bed, gives his name as Stanley Heath.

CHAPTER IV.—Marcia says nothing to Sylvia about the jewels Heath had asked her to hide. Though uneasy, she is unwilling, for some reason, to believe him to be a thief. Sylvia, by chance, discovers the jewels. A handkerchief with the initials "S. C. H." convinces her that Heath is author of the robbery Sheriff Winslow had reported, and she realizes that Marcia herself must have hidden them. Deciding to say nothing, she puts the jewels back in their hiding place.

CHAPTER V.—Marcia admits to herself that she has altogether too deep an interest in her guest, but is powerless to overcome it. Unable to write because of his injured wrist, Heath has Marcia wire "Mrs. S. C. Heath," New York, saying he is safe. He also wires orders to a man named Currier to come at once. Sylvia, in her room, bedecks herself with the jewels. At Marcia's approach she hides them there. Heath asks Marcia to bring him the jewels. They are gone! Terror-stricken, she informs Heath. He kindly makes light of the loss. Sylvia has a letter from Horatio Fuller, "boy friend" in her home town, Alton City. Seizing an opportunity, she restores the jewels to their original hiding place.

The stranger bowed but offered no comment. "Thank you," he replied briefly. "Will this road take me to the beach?"

"Straight as an arrow."

Without wasting additional words or time, the stranger nodded and started off briskly in the direction indicated. When he reached the beach he halted, scanning eagerly the silvered house beyond the channel. Discovering no one in sight, he dragged from the shore a yellow dory, clambered into it, and catching up the oars began to row toward the dwelling silhouetted against the water and the glory of the morning sky.

* * * * * * * *

In the meantime, both Marcia and Sylvia had wakened early and were astir.

The kitchen fire was already snapping merrily in the stove, however, and the table was spread before the latter made her appearance.

She came in, carrying a thick envelope.

"Why, Sylvia, how you startled me!" Marcia exclaimed. "I did not hear you come down stairs. Why are you up so early?"

"I'm going to town to catch the morning mail. I have to get off this letter to Hortie. You see, if I didn't answer promptly he might think the candy had gone astray," explained the girl.

"Oh, of course, you must thank him for the candy," Marcia agreed. "Still, is it necessary to do so in such a rush—to walk to the village this morning?"

"I mean to row over."

"I'm afraid you can't, dear. I discovered last night the boat was gone. Eleazer Crocker must have appropriated it when he was here yesterday. I shall give him a good lecture when I see him. It is a serious thing to be left here with no way of getting to land. In fact, here we are with this tremendously important letter that must be posted immediately—willy-nilly."

With eyes brimming with laughter, Marcia shot a mischievous glance at her companion.

"It isn't just to thank Hortie for the candy that I'm writing," that young lady replied sedately. "You see, he asked if he might come to Wilton for his summer vacation. He has to know so he can make his plans."

"I see," smiled Marcia. "Under such conditions, I suppose the sooner the letter is sent the better."

"The sooner I start, the sooner I shall be back, I suppose," Sylvia answered with feigned reluctance. "Men are so unreasonable. Any errands?"

"Not today, thanks. Just the mail."

"I'll wait for it."

The eagerness betrayed by the reply left not the slightest doubt that Sylvia would wait, and gladly.

As the door closed behind her, Marcia smiled whimsically.

She prepared Heath's breakfast tray, and was about to take it upstairs when there was a gentle knock at the kitchen door.

A stranger stood upon the threshold.

"Is Mr. Stanley Heath staying here?" inquired he.

"Yes."

"I am Currier. Mr. Heath sent for me."

"Of course! Come in, won't you? Mr. Heath is expecting you. I'll tell him you are here."

"You needn't do that, madam. If you will just show me where he is—"

"At the head of the stairs."

"Very good. Thank you, madam. I will go up."

Marcia soon heard the invalid's voice, imperative and eager, each sentence ending with an interrogation. The lapses of silence which intervened and which at first she took to be pauses, she presently decided represented the inaudible and subdued replies of Currier.

To judge from the sounds, Heath was pouring out an avalanche of questions.

"He has forgotten all about breakfast," murmured Marcia. "I'll carry it up."

She mounted the stairs softly that her coming might break in as little as possible upon the conversation of her two guests.

"She was alone in the library when I went in," Heath was saying, "and turned so white I feared she might faint or scream. Luckily she did neither.

"'You know what I'm after,' I said—'the jewels. Come, hand them over.' At that, she began to cry.

"'Quickly,' I repeated. 'Some one may come.'

"With that she produced the jewel case, pouring out a torrent of explanations.

"I stopped no longer than I had to, I assure you. In no time I had made my getaway. Every detail of my plan would have gone smoothly but for the fog. I lost my bearings completely. Imagine my amazement at finding myself here."

Marcia waited to hear no more.

So Heath really had taken the jewels from the resisting woman who owned them—taken them against her will and made off with them!

He owned it!

Nay, more! Far from regretting what he had done, in his tone rang a note of satisfaction in his accomplishment.

She had never believed him guilty. Not until she heard the bitter irrevocable confession from his own lips did she waver, and even then she battled against the truth, refusing to be convinced. There must be some explanation, she told herself. Nevertheless, the shock was overwhelming.

Her head swam. Her heart beat wildly.

"I must not give way!" she reiterated to herself. "I must put on a brave front. He must not suspect I know."

It took a few moments for her to regain her grip on herself, to drag back her ebbing strength.

Then she knocked at the door.

"Here is your coffee, Mr. Heath," she called.

"Come in, Mrs. Howe. I'm afraid we've delayed you. I had entirely forgotten about breakfast and so, I'll be bound, had Currier. You met my right-hand man down stairs, I take it."

"You found the house without trouble?" Marcia inquired, making an effort to address the newcomer in a natural, off-hand manner.

"Yes, Mrs. Howe. A young man at the garage directed me."

As Marcia turned to go, her unfailing courtesy prompted her to say:

"Mr. Currier is welcome to stay if he wishes to, Mr. Heath. We can put him up perfectly well.

"Oh, no. He is returning directly. Nevertheless, I greatly appreciate your kindness."

"Mrs. Heath is anxious," put in Currier. "She begged me to come home as soon as possible that she might know how Mr. Heath was. Naturally she has been much worried."

"There, there, Currier—that will do," broke in Stanley Heath, flushing. "And now, since Mrs. Howe is here and is in our secret, I may as well tell you that part of the mission on which you came cannot be accomplished. You cannot take the gems back with you to New York. A calamity has befallen them."

"A calamity, sir?"

"Mrs. Howe helped me conceal the jewels downstairs in a hiding place under the kitchen floor," continued Stanley Heath. "When she went to get them they were gone."

"It is all very mysterious," broke in Marcia, taking up the tale. "I cannot in any way account for their disappearance and am much distressed. I cannot even see how anybody had the chance to take them. No one knew they were there."

"Would you be willing to show me where they were hidden and allow me to investigate?"

"Certainly. I'll take you downstairs now, while we have the opportunity. When do you start back?"

"That is for Mr. Heath to decide."

"Right off. As soon as you can get under way," Stanley Heath said decisively. "Go down now with Mrs. Howe, since she is so gracious, and have your breakfast. Examine, too, the place where we concealed the jewel case. You may discover a clew she has missed."

Preceding Currier into the kitchen, Marcia went straight to the hearth and pointed to the brick at her feet.

"It was here we put the jewel case," she said.

"I think, with your permission, I will take up the brick," the little man at her elbow quietly announced.

"Certainly," acquiesced Marcia.

Taking out his knife, Currier knelt and soon had the brick out of its hole.

Beneath it lay the jewel case, wrapped as before in Stanley Heath's monogrammed handkerchief.

Marcia could not believe her eyes.

"But—but—it wasn't there when I looked, I could swear it wasn't."

"Who could have taken it out? And if some one did why return anything so valuable?" Currier implied.

"I don't know. I do not understand it at all," the woman replied. "There is something uncanny about the whole affair."

"Well, at any rate, the gems are here now," said Currier in a matter-of-fact tone. "Mr. Heath will be much relieved. Shall I go up and—"

"I'll go." Marcia cried. "It won't take me a minute. I'll be right back."

"As you prefer."

Off flew Marcia.

Her haste, the radiance of her face must have suggested to the stranger a thought that had not occurred to him before, for after she had gone, he stood immovable in the middle of the floor looking after her.

Then a slow, shadowy smile passed across his features.

"So—ho!" he muttered. "So—ho!"

Marcia Could Not Believe Her Eyes.

He was still absorbed in reverie when Marcia, breathless and flushed, rejoined him.

"I can think of nothing but the jewels and their recovery. I am so happy I had completely forgotten your breakfast. You might run up to see Mr. Heath while I am getting it ready."

"I will do that. I shall be leaving at once and he may have final orders for me, or perhaps a letter for Mrs. Heath."

"Mrs. Heath!" Marcia repeated, as if the name suddenly brought before her conscience something hitherto forgotten. "Yes, yes! Of course."

Then turning her head aside, she inquired with studied carelessness:

"How long, I wonder, does Mr. Heath plan to remain in Wilton? I think that as soon as he is able to make the journey he would better go home. This climate is—is—damp and he will, perhaps, pick up faster away from the sea. If you have any influence with him, won't you please advise it?"

The man's small, gray eyes narrowed.

"I have no influence with Mr. Heath," replied he. "Mrs. Heath has, however. Shall I tell her?"

"I wish you would."

* * * * * * * *

An hour later My Unknown Lady weighed anchor and disappeared out to sea, carrying with her Currier and the jewels.

Marcia watched until the last snowy ripple foaming in her wake had disappeared, then she sank into a chair and brushed her hand across her eyes.

"And that's the end of that foolishness!" she muttered. "The end!"

CHAPTER VIII

IN SPITE of Elisha's indignation toward Stanley Heath, and his resolve to go to the Homestead with the break of dawn, it was noon before he and Eleazer got under way.

In the first place, the two men disagreed as to the proper method of arresting the alleged criminal.

"You can't take him on no warrant, 'Lish," Eleazer objected, "'cause you ain't actually got proof he's guilty."

"Proof? Ain't I got a clear case? Ain't I roundin' him up with the loot on him?" blustered Elisha.

"P'raps—p'raps you didn't really see the jewels," Eleazer quavered. "Are you plumb certain you saw them things?"

"Certain?"

"Come, come! Don't go up in the air, 'Lish. I ain't doubtin' your word. I just want to make sure we don't take no mis-steps an' make jackasses of ourselves," Eleazer explained. "Have you got everythin'?"

"I—I—guess so," Elisha said weakly.

The stroll to Crocker's Cove was not a hilarious one. With each successive step Elisha's spirits dropped lower and lower.

At last they came within sight of the bay.

"Where'd you leave the boat?" Eleazer questioned.

"I pulled her up opposite the fish-shanty."

"She ain't here."

"My soul an' body! What's to be done now?"

"I reckon we'll just have to give it all up," the sheriff responded with a sickly grin. "Call it off."

"An' let the thief escape? No sir—ee! We've got to go through with this thing now we've started if it takes a leg. We'll walk round by the shore."

In high dudgeon the two men plodded through the sand, its grit seeping into their shoes with every step.

It was not until they came within sight of the Homestead that the silence between them was broken.

"Wal, here we are!" Eleazer announced more genially.

"Yes—here—here we are!" his comrade panted. "My soul an' body—what a tramp! I'm near dead! Wait a minute, Eleazer. Let's take 'count of stock an' decide how we're goin' to proceed. We've got to make a plan."

"But we've made a plan a'ready. After you've knocked at the door an' gone in—"

"I knocked an' gone in?"

"Yes, yes," Elisha repeated. "After that, you'll sorter state the case to Marcia, 'xplainin' why we've come an' everythin'—"

"An' what'll you be doin' meantime?" Eleazer inquired, wheeling sharply.

"Me? Why, I'll be waitin' outside, kinder loiterin' 'til it's time for me to go in—don't you see?"

"I don't. I think 'twould be better was you to go ahead an' pave the way for me. That's how it's done in plays. Some kinder unimportant person goes first an' afterward the hero comes in."

"So you consider yourself the hero of this show, do you?" commented Eleazer sarcastically.

"Ain't I?"

"Wal, you don't 'pear to me to be. Who egged you on an' marched you here—answer me that? If you ain't the most ungrateful cuss alive! I've a big half mind to go back home an' leave you to do your arrestin' alone."

"Don't do that, Eleazer, don't do that!" Elisha begged. "Don't go home an' leave me—now—at the last minute."

"Very well," Eleazer agreed magnificently. "Then I'll remain an' give you my moral support."

Elisha got up and, dragging one foot after another, moved toward the house.

"Now knock," commanded the dictator.

Tremulously Elisha tapped on the door.

No answer came.

"Knock, I tell you! That ain't knockin'. Give the door a good smart thump so'st folks'll hear it an' be made aware somethin' important's goin' on. I'll show you."

Eleazer gave the door a spirited bang.

"Law, Eleazer! A rap like that would wake the dead," Elisha protested. "I hear somebody. Stand by me, Eleazer. Where are you goin'? Come back here, can't you? You promised—"

"I didn't promise to go in first. You was to do that," Eleazer called from his vantage ground round the corner.

"But—but—" Elisha whimpered.

The door swung open and Marcia stood on the sill.

"Why, Elisha!" she exclaimed. "How you startled me. Come in. You're all dressed up, aren't you? Have you been to a funeral?"

"No. I—we—"

The sheriff cleared his throat.

"Me an' Eleazer—" he began.

"Eleazer? Did he come with you?"

Elisha nodded.

"Isn't he coming in?"

"Yes—yes. He's coming presently."

"Well, sit down and tell me the news."

His dignity, his pomposity put to rout, Elisha, feeling very small indeed, backed into the nearest chair.

"You won't mind if I go on with my baking, will you?" Marcia said, bustling toward the stove. "I'm makin' dried apple turnovers. They'll be done in a second and you shall have one. I guess a nice hot apple turnover won't go amiss."

With deftness she whisked a triangle of flaky pastry onto a plate and extended it toward her guest.

He sat down with the plate in his lap.

He had taken only an introductory mouthful, however, when the door parted a crack and Eleazer crept cautiously through the opening.

For a moment he stood transfixed, then he burst out in a torrent of reproach.

"Lish Winslow, what on earth are you doin'? Here I've been waitin' outside in the wind, ketchin' my death of cold, an' you settin' here by the stove rockin' an' eatin' pie!"

"I know, Eleazer, I know," Elisha stammered. "It may, mebbe, seem queer to you. I just hadn't got round to the business in hand, that's all. I'm comin' to it in time. I've made a start. I was just leadin' up to it in a sorter tactful way."

"There ain't no way of bein' tactful when you're arrestin' folks. You've got the thing to do an' you have to go straight to it."

"Arresting folks?" Marcia repeated, looking from one man to the other.

"Yes. Since 'Lish is so spineless at his job, I may's well tell you what we come for. Pretty kind of a sheriff he is."

"You better look out, Eleazer Crocker, how you insult an officer of the law," Elisha bawled angrily. "Say a word more an' I'll hail you into court."

"If you don't land me there faster'n you do Heath I shan't worry," jeered Eleazer.

"Heath? Mr. Heath?" Marcia repeated.

"Yes. We come over here this

"Arresting Folks?" Marcia Repeated.

mornin' to place Mr. Stanley Heath under arrest," Eleazer announced.

"Of what are you accusing Mr. Heath?" Marcia demanded.

"Of the Long Island robbery," Eleazer answered.

"You mean to say you think him a thief?"

"We know he's one—leastways Elisha does."

"I—yes! I'm tol'able sure. I have evidence," Elisha replied. "At least I figger I have."

"Shucks, 'Lish!" Eleazer cried. "Where's your backbone? You figger you have! Don't you know it? Ain't you beheld the loot with your own eyes?"

Elisha nodded.

"Then why on earth don't you stand up in your boots an' say so?"

The door opened and Sylvia entered, then stopped, arrested on the threshold by the sound of angry voices.

Marcia, with whitened lips but with face grave and determined, remained with her back to the stairway door, her eyes never leaving Elisha Winslow's. There was something in her face Sylvia had never seen there—a light of battle; a fierceness as of a mother fighting for her child; a puzzling quality to which no name could be given.

Suddenly, as the girl studied her, recognition of this new characteristic flashed upon her understanding. It was love!

Anger, perhaps terror, had forced Marcia into betraying a secret no other power could have dragged from her.

"What proof have you?" Marcia demanded.

Elisha shifted from one foot to the other.

"I've seen the jewels," he whispered. "They're here—in this room, under that brick. I've seen 'em."

With finger pointing dramatically toward the hearth, Elisha strode forward.

Sylvia, however, sprang before him, standing 'twixt him and his goal.

"What a ridiculous story, Mr. Winslow!" she cried, "What a fantastic yarn! Do you imagine for one moment there could be anything hidden under those bricks and Marcia and I not know it? Why, one or the other of us has been in this room every instant since Mr. Heath arrived. When could he get the chance to hide anything? There is nothing here, Mr. Winslow, truly there is nothing. I swear it."

"Nevertheless, let him look, Sylvia. Let them both look."

"Please—please, Marcia—!!"

Sylvia was upon her knees now on the hearth, and the men, hesitating to remove her by force, halted awkwardly.

Marcia regarded her first with startled incredulity—then with coldness.

So Sylvia loved Heath, too!

She was fighting for him—fighting with all her feeble strength.

A pang wrenched the older woman's heart.

What if Heath had played a double game—made love to Sylvia as he had made love to her? If so—if the man were a mountebank the sooner they both found it out—the sooner the world knew it, the better.

If, on the other hand, he was innocent, he should have his chance.

"Get up, Sylvia," she said. "The sheriff must search. He must do his duty. We have no right to prevent it."

Her face was pale, her lips tightly set.

The brick was lifted out.

A smothered cry escaped Sylvia and was echoed.

"Why—land alive—there's nothin' here!" gasped the sheriff.

"I told you there was nothing!" Sylvia taunted, beginning to laugh hysterically.

"Wal, 'Lish, all I can say is you must either 'a' been wool gatherin' or dreamin' when you conceived this yarn," Eleazer jeered.

"I warn't," hissed Elisha, stung to the quick. "I warn't dreamin'. Them jewels was there. I saw 'em with my own eyes. I swear to heaven I did." He confronted Sylvia. "They was there, young lady, warn't they? You know they was. That's why you was so scairt for me to look. You've seen 'em. Deny it if you dare."

"Of course I deny it."

"Humph! But Marcia won't. You can lie if you want to save the skin of that good-for-nothin' critter upstairs—though what purpose is served by your doin' it I can't see. But Marcia won't. If she says them jewels warn't here I'll believe it. Come now, Marcia. Was there ever diamonds an' things under this brick or warn't there?"

"Yes."

"You saw 'em?"

As if the admission was dragged from her, Marcia formed, but did not utter, the word:

"Yes."

"There! Then I ain't gone daffy! What I said was true," Elisha acclaimed, rising in triumph and snapping his finger at Eleazer.

"The jewels were Mr. Heath's. He hid them for safe keeping.

"A likely story! He stole 'em—that's what he did."

"Prove it," challenged Marcia, with sudden spirit, a spurt of crimson burning on either cheek.

"Prove it?" Elisha was taken aback. "Wal, I can't at the moment do that. I can't prove it. But even if I can't, I can make out a good enough case against him to arrest him on suspicion. That's what I mean to do—that's what I come for an' what I'll do 'fore I leave this house."

"Mr. Heath is sick."

CAKE CONTEST WILL ATTRACT COOKS TOMORROW

The art of baking, as developed among women of Washington township, will be displayed tomorrow ,at the second annual cake contest, sponsored by the Country Club. The competition, in which hundreds of "amateur" bakers vie for honors, will be held at the club house, Centerville.

Mrs. Roland Bendel, chairman of the contest, reiterated this week that the contest is open to all who care to enter. There is no entry fee, and all may compete except professional bakers. The rumor that club members are the only prize winners, is refuted by last year's statistics, Mrs. Bendel says, when sixty per cent of the prizes were won by women who did not belong to the club. The judge of the cakes, which will be graded on aroma, texture and evenness of baking, will be Martha Lee.

Preliminary reports point to a larger participation this year, the chairman states, estimating that more than 250 entrants are expected. Nearly all of last year's contestants plan to try again this time.

Following the cake contest, the afternoon will be given to a cooking demonstration, in which a complete Thanksgiving dinner will be prepared, including turkey and all the fixings. The cooked bird will be sold in the afternoon.

All contestants are urged to get their cakes to the club house between the hours of 10 a. m. and noon tomorrow, as cakes entered later than noon will not be judged.

OAKLAND BANQUET

Roland Bendel will attend a dnner at Oakland tonight, given by the Oakland Junior Chamber of Commerce in honor of the crew of the China Clipper.

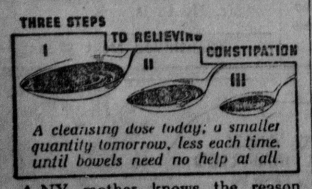
NO UPSETS
The proper treatment for a bilious child



A cleansing dose today; a smaller quantity tomorrow, less each time, until bowels need no help at all.

ANY mother knows the reason when her child stops playing, eats little, is hard to manage. Constipation. But what a pity so few know the sensible way to set things right!

The ordinary laxatives, of even ordinary strength, destroy all hopes of restoring regularity.

A liquid laxative is the answer, mothers. The answer to all your worries over constipation. A liquid can be measured. The dose can be exactly suited to any age or need. Just reduce the dose each time, until the bowels are moving of their own accord and need no help.

This treatment will succeed with any child and with any adult.

Doctors use a liquid laxative. Hospitals use the liquid form. If it is best for their use, it is best for home use. The liquid laxative they generally use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Any druggist has it.

Deputies from the Hayward sheriff's office and local police searched the "jungles" in Washington township last Friday and Saturday, on the tip that a murder suspect was hiding in this vicinity. Officers withheld the name of the man, but hinted that he was wanted at Stockton for the killing of a railroad policeman there several months ago. The authorities stated that the man was a dangerous character.

Pineapple Prospers

ONLY prosperous people could afford to eat pineapple before the invention of canning. Poets used it as a symbol for the rare and luxurious—but kings and millionaires ate it. Balzac devised a scheme for getting rich by raising pineapple under glass, in the Paris suburbs, but the pineapples let him down. They preferred Hawaiian sunshine.

Today, however, pineapples have become so prosperous that they can afford to contribute their gold to all—the gold of health and appetite. On the sunny salt-breeze isles of Hawaii they ripen in such abundance that canners can afford to gather only the very best of the fine crop, pack them in cans and send them to us at exceedingly low cost.

Share Their Wealth

To keep pace with the prosperity of pineapple, dietitians are devising new ways to use them, so that they may continue to bring their wealth to our table. Perhaps you will say, "They are so delicious just as they come from the can—why bother to prepare them otherwise?"

The answer is—variety. Use them just as they come from the can for breakfast fruit, and you will find that, prepared in one of the delicious new forms, you will be ready for them again in a dinner salad, with meats, or as a dessert.

Two Top-Notchers

There is an East Indian Shrimp Salad, for example, which combines crushed pineapple with shredded cabbage, moistened with mayonnaise and seasoned with curry powder—all neatly stuffed in ripe tomatoes, over the edge of which fresh or canned shrimps are hooked. Add this to your pineapple repertoire and see how rich you feel!

There's a dessert, too, that's quick as a wink to prepare—and so good. Just sauté sponge cake to a nice brown, add drained diced pineapple and sugar to the pan, sauté a few moments longer and when slightly golden in color, pour it over the sponge cake, topped with plenty of whipped cream. It's extraordinary! *
